"We wanted to make sure that people's organization and workflow didn't feel like they would have to change, but that the UI was going to change in a way that felt natural to use. We wanted people to feel familiar with Photoshop once they open the app up, and that happened too. It feels very simple. Just as Photoshop Elements was really about getting just the right amount of image editing functionality in the right place. Simultaneous editing in Photoshop is easy, too. You can preview them using the Contact Support panel (just click it when others are typing) and comment in real time as they go. You can also leave comments in Facebook and Tumblr, and even edit from mobile. The worst part about this Adobe update is that everything is automatically checked, approved and published online without any human approval at all. Yes, until if this last update doesn't sit well with a lot of people. It's primarily the notification messages of the odd types of files Adobe's AI does not understand that are corrupted, locked, or otherwise illegal. These messages can be very large (some end up taking control over the OS), and popping up on your screen, trying to get your attention. While you could disable them, the new software doesn't really work that way. That is, after clicking, it will ignore you for days (anywhere from hours to a few days), then it will suddenly beep at you, ask you to do something (apply updates, etc), and then resume function all over again. At least it doesn't go down forever. I have a couple of backups (non-iOS) that I can load quickly. However, Lightroom 5 is not as tolerant of it, and it crashed down for good about 6 months into the rollout. Fortunately, I have a Time Machine clone of my Mac in my Dropbox that I can load and then I'm OK. If, for some reason, the Apple Support Rep in my area cannot help me, I would guess the best course of action would be to complain via Customer Support and seek a different machine. With an Apple, you can also tell it to stop integration with the rest of the iCloud Suite. I think the only major advantage to this new update is that you might now be able to hide some of the warning messages.
